Compulsory REVISION comments	I consider that the paper has merits to be published. The present work describes a method to preserve the characteristics of the leaves of Moringa oleifera. It compares a new method that incorporates freezing steps. The new methodology is compared at the same time with the product obtained through a less technified process. The work is relevant and important .Relevant because it establishes a standardized production of M.oleifera for later investigations. The importance lies in the potential possibilities of the plant components. It is necessary that through scientific methodology an adequate production is established in reproducible mode for later studies.
