Compulsory REVISION comments	"Examination of condition for optimized decellularized liver preparation" describes the condition where nuclei and cytosol were effectively removed from liver preparation. Hence the article is relevant. Authors have provided morphological and histological evidences, but there is no biochemical evidence especially for a biochemical journal. So, authors should include biochemical marker assays for ALT, AST, glutathione or bilirubin assay or immunofluorescence assay showing negative result compared to control. So, it is suggested to include atleast one biochemical marker in the picture for this paper to be published in this biochemical journal.
