I have looked at the paper in-depth. It is good it is an opinion paper but it should be written as though it is being presented to a naïve reader or a non-specialized person interested in knowing what is currently happening (trending issues) in the field of Obstetrics and Gynaecology. At first glance, I thought this paper was a result of systematic review or at least based on several papers and opinion of many researchers in the field of obstetrics and gynaecology. I have made my comments on the revised documents which I will send together to you for the authors to first correct them before it can be accepted for publication. Most of the statements in the document are not well cited and mainly full of incomplete sentences which are typically what we commonly experience with clinician writings. My humble opinion is that once the paper can be revised as suggested, I would have no reason to give it a go ahead for publication in your esteem journal.
