Compulsory REVISION comments	The methods of the study needs to be amended The study is of great relevance but need to be revised. The authors need to put into consideration the methods used in their research which in turn will affect their results. The method of their bacterial identification is obsolete, more biochemical testing can be employed in our developing country not necessarily molecular identification to validate their identification. Also, there was no clear statistical association shown in the study. More so, the plating medium used, how they arrived at the colony forming unit which needs explanation (the figures presented). The interval of two weeks before other methods of hand washing was done needs to be justified. The time may not be necessary but the activities and the type of bacterial isolates recovered.
