

Editor's Comment:

Although both reviewers have noticed minor errors in the article and all of them have been properly corrected by the authors, I see a major problem with this manuscript: Depression is a disease that is steeply growing worldwide, in all social classes and regardless of age and profession. Associating depression with a particular academic background can lead to misunderstanding that this or that profession causes depression. This does not hold, remembering that this disease is having its prevalence increased worldwide. Therefore, because of the lack of criticism of this article and the risk that this journal is releasing information that may lead to the mistaken view of depression, I do not recommend the receipt of this manuscript.
